To a Child, Love is spelled T-I-M-E

The wisdom of our day is: the more money you spend on a child, the more you are showing your love. This is not only materialistic, it is wrong and it is dangerous to a young child.

Materialism is not new to the world, but it picked up steam in our nation after World War II. The economic depression had been ended by the war, manufacturing was in high gear and perhaps even more to the point, young families who had lived through the hardship of the depression and the destruction of the war, began to declare: my kids are not going to be forced to do without like I did. So, they set about to create an easier life for their children.

Unfortunately, children began to see less of their parents and the void was filled by things. Closets swelled with toys, then rooms filled, then garages as parents tried to say, "I love you." Then, narcissistic creatures replaced the children. Creatures who demanded more and more to feed their appetites, in spite of the cost to others. Even worse, they don't know how to love or be loved.

A young child wants to be with those important to them: Dad, Mom, family. They don't care how much the toy cost, but that you sat in the floor to play, read, listen and hug.

It is not a waste of time to be with a child, even if you are bored to tears. When you watch and smile and say, "way to go" the child is feeling acceptance, gaining confidence and experiencing love. When we play and even work together with a child, we are molding the character that will make them whole. Give love = time.
