Together

All of us have experienced the “blues” or being “down in the dumps.” It is so typical that country music became an industry on sadness and New Orleans Blues is a genre of its own.

One joke says a man somehow played a tape of a country song backward and he got back his girl, his pickup, his job and even his dog came home. What was lost was found. How can we combat the cycle of sadness which effects us all?

First, remember who loves you- God! It is his love that helps us understand our worth. You are not only important to others, you are important to YHWH God.

Next, be frequent in prayer. Through Jesus, you are able to be heard by the LORD who loves you. Recognize your blessings and be grateful for each. Know God is with you and will give strength for the hard times we all go through.

Do something good for another person: send a card, make a call, meet for iced tea, visit. Focus on someone else. It is also good to stay connected disciples who are steadfast and faithful. Spread it around, don't monopolize any one person's time. Look beyond yourself.

Try to take care of yourself: eat right and exercise. We impact our sleep habits and general health, which in turn affects our moods. I once had a neighbor who slept 20 hours a day and constantly over ate. Her depression and activity was a cycle that perpetuated one another. If you are sleeping too much or not enough, you may need to talk to your doctor.

Stay connected with people and with God. Maintain contacts, don't push away your friends and loved ones. If we isolate ourselves, we make things worse. Read your Bible and attend worship.
